The Honorable Richard K. Armey
Majority Leader
House of Representatives

Dear Mr. Armey:

This report responds to your office's request for information on federal spending by budget function and subfunction for fiscal year 1996. In the following appendixes, we display agency spending in terms of gross obligations<sup>1</sup> reported against the broad federal mission areas described by budget function classifications. As we have suggested in previous products and testimony,<sup>2</sup> examining patterns of spending according to budget functions provides a starting point for discussions of government restructuring and can be useful in identifying possible program overlap by focusing on which federal agencies are associated with which federal mission areas.

Appendix I provides a brief description of each budget function and subfunction. Appendix II provides a series of tables that classify department and agency spending by subdepartment<sup>3</sup> and by subfunction; appendix III summarizes spending for each budget function and subfunction by federal departments and subdepartments. We compiled the information presented in appendixes II and III from automated information collected and maintained by the Office of Management and Budget as part of its process to develop the President's fiscal year 1998 budget. We did not independently verify reported data, although we did <sup>1</sup>Obligations reflect orders placed, contracts awarded, services received, and other similar transactions during a fiscal year. As an expression of an agency's total financial commitments for a given period, gross obligations portray the relative size of an organization, without regard to the type of underlying budgetary resource or when resulting outlays may occur. When aggregated, however, gross obligations may overstate both department and governmentwide totals. For example, an agency's obligations may include commitments made to another agency, which may then be reobligated by the receiving agency in the same fiscal year.

<sup>2</sup>This report updates a series of products we prepared for the Chairman, Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, in 1995. See Government Restructuring: Identifying Potential Duplication in Federal Missions and Approaches (GAO/T-AIMD-95-161, June 7, 1995); Budget Function Classification: Agency Spending by Subfunction and Object Category, Fiscal Year 1994 (GAO/AIMD-95-116FS, May 10, 1995); and Budget Function Classification: Agency Spending and Personnel Levels for Fiscal Years 1994 and 1995 (GAO/AIMD-95-115FS, April 11, 1995).

<sup>3</sup>In this report, the term "subdepartment" generally refers to second-tier organizational structures, such as bureaus, administrations and services, and to individual independent agencies, such as the U.S. Postal Service or the Federal Maritime Commission.

reconcile total obligations for departments and agencies to published sources.

Appendixes II and III provide first-level observations on who does what within the enormous complexity of federal missions and organizations. This perspective can be augmented by linking these department and subdepartment summaries to the account-level detail provided in our recent product, Compendium of Budget Accounts: Fiscal Year 1998 (GAO/AIMD-97-65, April 1997). And, for additional detail, the budget account summaries in the compendium can be further linked to the Budget of the United States Government, Fiscal Year 1998 - Appendix, and to agency budget justifications provided to the Congress. In this manner, a reader can “drill down” as needed to inquire into any particular spending pattern within any function, subfunction, or agency.

The budget function classification system provides a comprehensive and consistent means to capture federal spending according to area of national need. Because of this, budget functions are the categories used by the Congress in its concurrent resolution on the budget and will likely be the classification system used to summarize federal spending in governmentwide financial statements, which are required by the Chief Financial Officers Act of 1990 (as expanded by the Government Management Reform Act of 1994), and in the February 1998 governmentwide performance plan, which is required by the Government Performance and Results Act of 1993. Some of the patterns disclosed by arraying spending by function include the following.

- Most federal departments and agencies address more than one mission area; in fact, most made obligations in 1996 to three or more budget functions. If the analysis is continued to subdepartments and subfunctions, the picture is often more complex. For example, the Department of Health and Human Services has about a dozen subdepartments addressing eight missions ranging from Health Care Services to Training and Employment. The Department of the Interior has over a dozen subdepartments addressing 11 missions ranging from Recreational Resources to General Purpose Fiscal Assistance to Elementary, Secondary and Vocational Education.
- Focusing on the missions of government, rather than federal organizations, produces a similarly intricate picture. Excluding Social Security, Medicare, and Net Interest, 6 of the remaining 15 budget functions are addressed by six or more executive branch departments and major agencies. For example, seven major federal organizations made obligations in 1996 to the Natural Resources and Environment mission area and seven to Community and Regional Development.

- Lastly, in nominal dollar terms, the significance of a department to a mission area, or of a mission area to a department, varies considerably. Spending for the Transportation mission area, for example, is almost entirely within the Department of Transportation, which is also associated with that mission area almost exclusively. However, the Department of Agriculture, with nearly two dozen subdepartments addressing 16 different subfunctions, presents a different picture. The Department is responsible for almost all spending in the Agriculture function, but half of the Department's obligations are associated with a different function and subfunction (Food and Nutrition Assistance within Income Security).

Care must be exercised in drawing specific conclusions from the information contained in the enclosed tables. All of these data are reported as part of the annual executive budget formulation process; none of the data are audited. Additional limitations to note include the following.

- The function classifications can in some cases aggregate very different activities. For example, the Income Security function involves 15 federal organizations, but these organizations are not all dealing with the same type of "Income Security." Income Security actually involves three broad subfunctions: (1) retirement and disability, addressed by nine different federal entities, many of which administer separate employee pension programs; (2) cash assistance, provided by five federal organizations; and (3) housing, food, and nutrition assistance programs, concentrated in two major departments spread across seven components with some small participation by two independent agencies.
- A specific function or subfunction may not fully encompass a set of logically related activities. For example, the Commerce and Housing Credit function does not include the Housing Assistance subfunction, which is in Income Security. Similarly, the Income Security function does not include, for example, Social Security or Income Security for Veterans.
- Subfunctions are based on a variety of organizing themes. Some are based on divisible segments of broad mission areas (e.g., Water Transportation), some on a set of related activities (e.g., Health Care Services), and some on common functions (e.g., Central Fiscal Operations).
- Although each federal activity is placed in a function that best defines its most important purpose, there is discretion when coding an individual budget account against the function categories. If the account finances activities in two or more subfunctions within a single function, the general

function code is used; if the account is associated with two or more functions, a general multi-function code is used.<sup>4</sup>

We are sending copies of this report to the Chairmen and Ranking Minority Members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations; Senate Committee on the Budget; Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs; House Committee on Appropriations; House Committee on the Budget; House Committee on Government Reform and Oversight; and other interested parties. We will also make copies available to others on request.

We will continue to work with your office to provide timely information and assistance as you analyze these data. If you have any questions, please call me at (202) 512-9573. The major authors of this correspondence were Michael J. Curro, Assistant Director, who can be reached at (202) 512-2991; Laura Hamilton; and John Mingus.

Sincerely yours,

Paul L. Posner
Director, Budget Issues

<sup>4</sup>Where an account's obligations were reported to more than one function, we allocated the obligations on the same percentage basis as reported for the account's gross budget authority; for accounts lacking gross budget authority, we allocated the obligations on the same percentage basis as reported for the account's gross outlays.
